

Carlton Business Centre – Press Release

Zero notice exit policy - office space for startup businesses

For immediate release – 28th August 2014

The Carlton Business Centre in Wiltshire is offering a zero notice exit policy for any new tenants whose business has begun trading within the last 12 months. Available immediately, this unique offer aims to help small businesses move from their home office into professional office space by reducing the financial commitment.

At the Carlton Business Centre new tenants can currently rent an office within 2 days, so this zero notice exit initiative fits in with their 'easy in, easy out' policy of renting office space, making them an attractive option for any new company.

Alistair Fenwick, owner of the Carlton Business Centre, said: "In the recession we've seen a boom in startup businesses, often started by people in their spare room who've been made redundant. I've always been an enthusiastic supporter of entrepreneurship that's why I wanted to make it even easier for startups to make the move to a serviced office."

The Carlton Business Centre feels that in this difficult financial climate we should all pull together to grow our economy and while making it easier for startup business to make the transition from home to a serviced office is only a small gesture; they hope it will be a significant one for those businesses it helps.
